INTRODUCTION Forty years ago, James Granger (1970) described a number of obstacles that companies faced. in order to gain an effective communication. Besides that, the introduction of technology in workplace communication, as well as, the high levels of penetration in the globalised markets, created the essence of effective collaboration. For example Whittaker and Bradner (2000), introduced the terms of interaction and outeraction. Interaction is "exchanging information", while outeraction means "stay connected" to coordinate impromptu meetings.
