Great leaders have the skill of proper distribution and delegation of tasks to their subordinates. Superior distribution and delegation skills are great leadership skills for managers. A leader or manager cannot be expected to do all the work for the team. So it is vital that managers have delegation and distribution as one of the must-haves in their skill sets bag. You can identify that all these skills are connected with each other and you are not wrong. With proper communication and superior emotional intelligence, you are likely to identify the skill sets of your employees. Examples of leadership and management skills for resume, job interview, and CV. But which is the most important, this management skills list can guide you in improving and developing leadership skills needed to be a good manager. What are leadership skills? Are leadership skills learned or innate? These are some of the most interesting questions in the business. Management and effective leadership skills are a combination of many abilities that allow you to lead, to motivate, to inspire, to create and to build respect. And Yes. They can be learned! Examples of leadership skills are really numerous, but here you will learn a list of the most effective leadership skills and Project managers are both managers and leaders. This paper examines the leadership competencies that can help project managers effectively manage project teams. In doing so, it defines the concept of leadership, the roles that leaders and managers play, and the five differences between managing and leading project teams. It describes the four primary skills that project leaders possess. A number of authors have written about leadership skills for project managers, including Steven Flannes and Ginger Levin (2005) and Vijay Verma (1995), providing great sources for exploring ways to develop project managers into effective leaders. There is not sufficient room in this paper to even summarize their work.
