It made No. 11 on the Australian Kent Music Report Albums Chart and the Top 30 on the United States Billboard 200. The album was produced by long-time associate John Farrar, who also co-wrote four tracks; the cover art includes photography of Newton-John by Helmut Newton and Herb Ritts.

From Psycho Pandas: While Hara Sakutarou grieves because of the loss of his parents in an accident, he meets an enigmatic young man who calls himself AI. Through the course of events, they start living together. Where did AI come from that he's always so bewildered and detached from this transient world? Sakutarou is immediately captivated by AI's mysterious and nostalgic ways. Before long, Sakutarou takes advantage of the situation and violently embraces AI. However just he starts, AI's secret is exposed! A nostalgic "Overnight Observation" from Soul Kiss doesn't come close to the magic of those radio gems. It, like the front and back cover photos, seems a bit contrived, as does much of this album. "You Were Great, How Was I?" is a duet with Carl Wilson, and features he and Christopher Cross providing authentic Beach Boys harmonies.
