AIP Statistical Research Center. focus on Hispanic Americans in Physics & Geoscience Enrollments and Degrees. Hispanic Americans are less likely to earn bachelor's degrees in geoscience and physics than they are in other disciplines. Fewer than 5% of the recent bachelor's recipients in physics and geoscience were Hispanic Americans. By contrast, Hispanics were twice as likely to be among recent college graduates who majored in psychology. The representation of Hispanic Americans among bachelor's degree recipients has taken rather different paths in physics and in geoscience over the last dozen years. Prior to 2002, approximately the same number of Hispanic Americans earned bachelor's degrees in physics and in geoscience. Resource information. In 2016, Hispanics accounted for 18% of the nation's population and were the second-largest racial or ethnic group behind whites. (All racial groups are single race non-Hispanic.) View interactive charts and detailed tables on U.S. Hispanics. They are also the nation's second-fastest-growing racial or ethnic group, with a 2.0% growth rate between 2015 and 2016 compared with a 3.0% rate for Asians. The slowing of Hispanic population growth is occurring as immigration to the U.S. from Mexico levels off and the fertility rate
