Major works of postcolonial criticism have been produced by scholars in the fields of history, sociology, and political sciences. Primary influential works include Edward Said's Orientalism, whose thesis states that the West has misunderstood and misappropriated notions of the East or "Orient," its cultures, and its exemplars. Postcolonial criticism deals mainly with the literatures of Africa, Asia, and the Caribbean by analyzing the interactions between the culture, customs, and history of indigenous peoples and of the colonial power that governs. Postcolonial criticism is part of a larger field called cultural studies, or race and ethnicity studies. A critical analysis of the history, culture, literature and modes of discourse on the Third World countries in Africa, Asia, the Caribbean Islands and South America, postcolonialism concerns itself with the study of the colonization (which began as early as the Renaissance), the decolonization (which involves winning back and reconstituting the native cultures), and the neocolonising process (an aftermath). The major theoretical works in postcolonial theory include The Wretched of the Earth. Hybridity in postcolonial studies has been influenced by the work of political theorists like Will Kymlicka who posits a "multicultural citizenship" in the globalised world. More specifically, it is a critical theory analysis of the history, culture, literature, and discourse of (usually European) imperial power. The postcolonial critique analyzes the self-justifying discourse of neocolonialism and the functions (philosophic and political) of its over-inclusive terms, to establish the factual and cultural inaccuracy of homogeneous concepts, such as the "Arabs," the "First World," "Christendom," and the "Ummah," actually comprise heterogeneous peoples, cultures, and geography, and that accurate descriptions of the world's peoples, places, and things require nuanced. As a term in contemporary history, postcolonialism occasionally is applied, temporally, to denote the immediate time after the period during which imperial powers retreated from their colonial territories. Post-colonial criticism is similar to cultural studies, but it assumes a unique perspective on literature and politics that warrants a separate discussion. Specifically, post-colonial critics are concerned with literature produced by colonial powers and works produced by those who were/are colonized. Post-colonial theory looks at issues of power, economics, politics, religion, and culture and how these elements work in relation to colonial hegemony (Western colonizers controlling the colonized). Post-colonial criticism also takes the form of literature composed by authors that critique Euro-centric hegemony. A Unique Perspective on Empire. Postcolonial theory is applied to political science, to history, and to other related fields. People who call themselves postcolonial scholars generally see themselves as part of a large (if poorly defined and disorganized) movement to expose and struggle against the influence of large, rich nations (mostly European, plus the U.S.) on poorer nations (mostly in the southern hemisphere). Taken literally, the term "postcolonial literature" would seem to label literature written by people living in countries formerly colonized by other nations. It is striking how little modern fiction from formerly colonized nations highlights the colonial past. Non-fiction writers often point out
