World War II, some say, was scripted on March 5, 1933, when Adolf Hitler, then Chancellor of the fragile Weimar Republic, overthrew President Hindenburg, then passing the ironically named "Enabling Act", which effectively disabled all powers of the Parliament and the Constitution. The League of Nations was reduced to a joke with the withdrawal of Nazi Germany and Imperial Japan. The rusty wheels of history creaked into life, and very soon the world was hurtling towards its second full-blown and full-blooded war of the century. Cartoons for the article are taken from Mark Bryant's book "World War 2 in Cartoons". The Edict would like to make a call for more such pieces from the social science departments at Ashoka. Cartoons: World War II. Although there's nothing funny about war, creative people can find humor almost anywhere. Here are some cartoons from WWII-era issues of the Post to prove the point! Diana Denny. Share on Facebook (opens new window). World War II brought scrap metal drives, regulation haircuts, and many other major life adjustments—both in the military and at home. Nevertheless, Post cartoonists during the war years still managed to find humor in the situation. "One thing I can't understand about this sentry business. Can you imagine anybody answering 'Foe'?" During World War II, Walt Disney was commissioned by the US and Canadian governments to create war propaganda for war bonds and taxes. Walt Disney and the government agreed that they were both anti-Hitler. However, in his own time, Disney created antiwar cartoons, as well as humanitarian messages to American audiences to spread the message that they needed to sympathize with their enemies, who were, after all, fellow human beings. 10Der Fuehrer's Face. This short cartoon was made for the Canadian War Bond effort in 1941. In the midst of World War II, the USA and Canada asked ordinary citizens for help to pay for the war. Someone could buy a war bond worth $25 for only $18.75. See also category: World War II propaganda. Subcategories. This category has the following 2 subcategories, out of 2 total.
