Upper Saddle River, NJ: Prentice Hall. MLA (Modern Language Association) Style: Like APA, in-text citations should directly follow paraphrased material to correspond with the works cited page at the end of the essay. Place source information in parentheses and separate the source name and any other identifying information, which most times pertains to a source page number and date, website page name and date, (if it is an Internet source) or other source with the date and type of source given. Works cited page The teacher encouraged students to think of other examples of comparison, completion, and whole-part-part in their daily lives. Both students were able to solve new subtraction story problems without manipulatives and correctly answer the abstract questions on the posttest that required regrouping. These hands-on story-problems for different subtraction situations helped our high school students with special needs recognize that subtraction is required to solve problems in many different contexts. Teaching students with mental retardation: A life goal curriculum planning approach. Upper Saddle River, NJ: Prentice-Hall, Inc. A mentally retarded person is slow, or lacking in the development of mental functioning when compared to those of his age level. Therefore, for instance a 10 year old mentally retarded child may exhibit behavior like that of a 3 or 4 year old child depending on his level of retardation. Tips for Teachers of students with Mental Retardation

- Provide alternative instructional presentations using varied examples and focus on functional skills.
- Provide opportunities for students to demonstrate understanding actively before moving to independent practice
- Provide more opportunities for practice than appropriate if necessary for classmates.
- Use concrete examples when teaching new skills.
- Provide supportive and corrective feedback more often than necessary for classmates.
