Of all types of big cats, it has the widest distribution range, occurring from sub-Saharan Africa, through Central Asia, across the Indian subcontinent to Southeast Asia. And while some subspecies of the leopard are highly endangered, the species was considered reasonably secure. Until the experts realized that the leopards have lost 75 percent of their historic range and the population continues to decline. Unlike the ocelot, the margay spends most of its life in the trees. It is one of only three wild cat species with the flexible ankle joint that allows the cat to climb down trees head-first (the other two are the clouded leopard and the marbled cat). Margays are capable of hunting entirely in the trees. For the wild cats list below we have used data from the IUCN Cat Specialist Group's Revised taxonomy of the Felidae, a comprehensive study of wild cat species. Cat Characteristics. The lion is the only species of wild cat that lives in groups. Closely associated with water, the fishing cat lives near lakes, swamps and mangroves. It is capable of swimming large distances. The species' diet consists of fish, together with small mammals, birds and other small animals. The Leopard is a species of big cat found in sub-Saharan Africa, Asia, and parts of Russia. It is similar in appearance to the Jaguar but slightly smaller with a slenderer body. Its pale golden coat is covered in distinctive rosettes which, unlike those of the Jaguar, are not filled with spots.
